An Extraordinary Parish for Ordinary People

When I arrived in Rome as a lay student in 1999, one of the first priests I met was a Savoyard named Franck Quoëx (1967-2007). I still believe that he has to be one of the most elegant and gentlemanly clerics I have ever met in my life, and he was very kind to me as I struggled in my first steps to speak Italian and French. This amazing priest was a living repository of the Church's liturgical tradition. He had an encyclopedic mind for how to carry off the complicated ceremonies with bishops and the Pope in what we now call the Extraordinary Form of the Roman Rite. As a Master of Ceremonies, he was always calm and flawless in assisting large numbers of clerics to learn how to serve these ceremonies. I served under him several times, and got to know him, not only as a ceremoniere, but as a deeply pious priest.

Quoëx introduced me to a great love of the specifically Roman character of our Catholic faith. Our liturgy has grown out of the use common to the basilicas, the main churches of Rome, and has characteristics that are not only ancient, but deeply tied into the way that the Roman people exercised their Catholic faith. This incredible priest taught us how to do things as the Romans do, with precision and beauty, not as theater, but as an expression of a deeply felt love for the sacred. In an age in which churches had become iconoclastic and the vestments and vessels were ignoble and cheap, he taught many young men in Rome how to appreciate the clean austerity of the Italian Renaissance. He revived a type of vestment associated with St Philip Neri and Charles Borromeo, reminiscent of Renaissance Rome, as well a consistent liturgical aesthetic that incarnated that spirit. Many of the vestments we wear here are from that revived Roman tradition, not because they are old, but because they call to mind the glories of the Roman Catholic Reformation. In the I6th century, as is our own, the faith had grown cold with clerical laziness, heretical novelty and rank sensuality. The saints of that age show us much wisdom today in how they centered their lives around the Eucharist and divine worship, and celebrated in art and music the best of the human spirit and the glories of Catholic faith and Roman civilization.

The good Abbé taught me a lot in life, but he taught me more in his death. In 2006, he contracted pancreatic cancer. For nine months, he was a living image of Christ crucified, and never lost his quiet joy, his absolute dedication to the Roman liturgy, and prayed his way into eternity. At the age of 39, on the Feast of the Holy Name, this holy priest had a holy death. And his legacy has lived on in so many of us who studied under him in Rome as a model for how to be a gentleman and a priest of Jesus Christ. He once wrote: "The Mass is the Sun of our lives and our treasure. We love it due to the fact that it is substantially and principally of the Lord's institution. But we love it also as the Church, to which Jesus entrusted its celebration, has transmitted it to us down through the centuries by means of the various liturgical traditions. Because the prayers and rites developed through the centuries in order to explain and manifest before the eyes of the entire Church the unfathomable riches of the essential rite bequeathed by the Lord. ... We cannot in any way forswear a heritage slowly built by the faith of our fathers, their burning devotion, and the theological reflection around the sacrament of the Passion of the Lord. In contact with the Mass ... in which we also contemplate the purest masterpiece of Western Civilization, hierarchical as well as sacral -- our souls lift up and our hearts expand, while our minds taste the most authentic Eucharistic doctrine. This is why we wish to understand and love, at all times more ... our treasure, and we will not cease to defend and advance it."
