Letter from Our Pastor

An Extraordinary Parish for Ordinary People

Dear Friends in Christ,

When I was growing up, one of the distinctives of our Baptist church was that it was a King James Version of the Bible only church. This magnificent English version of the Protestant Bible, issued in 1611, has had a tremendous impact on our language and culture. In the 1980s, some evangelical Christians planted their flag, as it were, on this version of the Bible almost as if it were the original version of the Scripture itself, and rejected Christians who used other versions of the Bible. The irony of this whole thing was that King James I was bitterly opposed to the kind of Christianity that four centuries later would see him as the literary guarantor of authentic Protestantism. If you try to talk today to KJV-Only types about how the translation is inaccurate compared with the best scholarship in ancient manuscripts we have today, they feel you are attacking the faith itself.

Catholicism never had the same influence some one vernacular version of Scripture exercised over English-speaking Protestantism. For us, the Vulgate Latin version, produced by St Jerome in 382, has had a similar, if not greater weight. With the introduction of vernacular into the Mass in the 1960s, we have now had almost 60 years of varying translations of both scripture and liturgical texts. Many of us converts wax nostalgic about the beauty of the Jacobean English with which we were taught to pray, but many cradle Catholics find that language foreign to them!

While it is true that the Roman Rite of Mass had an impressive body of prayers, rite and ceremonies that developed organically from antiquity, the Roman Rite of Mass also has shown various moments of integration of elements from other rites, and additions and subtractions over the years. Many Catholics are not aware that, when they began to hear Mass in English, what they were hearing in their mother tongue was not actually what Catholics had prayed at Mass for centuries. Some scholars estimate that some 70% of the current Missal, in its Latin original is new or taken from other sources. When some Catholics learn this, they are scandalized at what they see as a betrayal of the liturgical tradition. They often latch on to the last version of the Latin-only Missal, published in 1962, as the gold standard for the faith and her worship.

Now, there is no doubt, the heritage of what we now call the Extraordinary Form of the Roman Rite is incredible, and worth preserving in its entirety as part of the cultural and spiritual patrimony of the Church. But we also cannot forget that the liturgy is not a museum piece fossilized in amber: it has developed over the centuries. The modern Roman Rite may be very different textually from the classical forms of our worship, the story of its composition and its imposition on the Church is one of the most astounding episodes in history, and there have been execrable abuses against the sacred done in its spirit. But, to be honest intellectually, we have to recognize that radical reforms of the liturgy have happened before, just not so much in the West. And there also have been important reversals, where, after decades or centuries of using re-formed rites, the Church has restored traditional elements to liturgies that were considered outdated or superseded, because they reflected better the teaching of the Church. The Syro-Malankara, Syro-Malabar, Chaldean and Syriac Rites have all seen tumultuous reforms and restorations, and the Church has continued.

It is over the paygrade of anyone in this parish whether the Church will officially restore to her modern rite elements from the patrimony of the Roman liturgy. Here, we celebrate both forms of the Roman Rite, not in a slavishly fundamentalist fashion, but with an eye to the mutual enrichment of both forms, and with an eye to the most beautiful celebration of the Paschal Mystery possible.

J. Christopher Smith
